Legislation will be brought forward to establish an Equal Pay Commission and address "discriminatory pay and conditions in the broadband industry", she said in the Dáil this afternoon. The Minister also announced that the Department of Communications will be establishing a broadband advisory group comprising "broadband industry representatives, consumers and others" to "assist the department with its review of the national broadband plan". Ms O'Sullivan acknowledged that the initiative will see the introduction of the broadband plan's budget into the public finances, "in a manner not previously envisaged". The total €50m earmarked for the National Broadband Plan (NBP) in the original budget was reduced by up to half in the 2013 Budget to €25m, after it became clear that €25m would not be available for its full objectives. Ms O'Sullivan said that while the revised €25m budget "had the effect of significantly reducing the plan's potential", the Government's objective would still be to roll out the full €50m. She said that the reform of the system of paying for the plan had been made possible through the introduction of the Universal Service Obligation (USO) and the introduction of the Universal Service Obligation Fund (USOF) in 2013. This had enabled a new funding mechanism, the Regional Universal Service Obligation Fund (RUSOF), to be established to address the issue of where €25m was missing. Ms O'Sullivan said that the

Not so long ago it was worth nothing to have a Cisco VPx server, but nowadays it's quite the opposite. The highly demanded Cisco VC4600 series is available with different models from 2 to 4 ports. In the type we can solve our troubles when we have one kind of Cisco VPx server, but then again, the problem is that there's no standard. ... Full review .1. Field of the invention The present invention relates to a procedure to be employed in the testing of an instrument, and particularly a physiological instrument of the type employed to measure such characteristics as blood pressure, pulse, temperature, galvanic skin resistance, etc. 2. Description of the Prior Art A number of types of mechanical indicators or testers have been devised for measuring such physiological characteristics as blood pressure, electrocardiogram (ECG), pulse rate, body temperature, galvanic skin resistance, etc. The most common type of tester employs a mechanism by which an operator, through the use of push-button controls, is able to increment or decrement a measuring parameter over a pre-determined range of values, thereby providing an indication of whether or not the measurement is
