At a barbecue in my school days, my father was telling me that he was going to leave me a bequest in his will for $100,000. He started talking about the kind of house he was going to buy, and how much it would cost and so on. I listened to him intently because I thought he had been to a lot of houses for clients and knew what he was talking about, and therefore would certainly know where to buy a pretty good house for $100,000. I was being socialized to love property. The conversation went on for about 10 minutes or so, with my father talking very emphatically about how he wanted a high-rise, and was so excited about the view, and the security it would provide me. I remember the exact moment I stopped believing what people were telling me. The problem was that there was a ratty-looking, old house across the street which would have been perfect, but it would cost at least $35,000. And that was before we had made the final decision that I was going to live in the city (far too expensive for my taste) and have him buy me a flat in the suburbs. I was learning that the actual value of these things - houses, cars, money - is not what they seem. As a child, I had no idea why my dad was buying me the ratty old house (or the new house, for
